COMPARING CAMPUSES

ACADEMIC HEALTH CENTERS

Our 2012 poster features universities with affiliated academic health centers. Each of these institutions is distinctive in terms of populations served, specialties taught, and engagement of surrounding communities. Many academic health center campuses are physically adjacent to their affiliated universities but not all; some are located in dense urban areas while others are suburban. Consistent among all is the commitment to health-related education, research and patient care. The overlapping relationships among these functions distinguish an academic health center from a traditional medical center. The poster's plans and statistics provide a snapshot of where the three health-related functions – education, research and patient care – overlap on the main health center campus core. Visit our website at www.asg-architects.com to compare these schools with our collection of more than 200 campuses side-by-side and learn more about the history and purpose of the poster.
